The holy rabbi, Rabbi Moshe, of blessed memory (his family name is unknown), was the Av Beit Din (Head of Court) of Radomysl the Lesser, which is located in the district of Lwów (Lemberg), near the San River.

In his youth, Rabbi Moshe was counted among the disciples of the holy rabbi, Rabbi Elimelech of Lizhensk, of blessed memory, as recorded in the book Ohel HaRebbe in the name of Rabbi Yosef Lewinstein, of blessed memory, Av Beit Din (Head of Court) of Searatzk, and also in the book Tiferet Banim Avotam, and others.

After the passing of his teacher of Lizhensk, he accepted the authority of the holy rabbi, Rabbi Yaakov Yitzchak, the Seer of Lublin, of blessed memory. He was among the elder disciples, and the Seer regarded him very highly.

It is further related that when the holy rabbi, the author of Chiddushei HaRim of Gur, of blessed memory, met Rabbi Moshe, the Chiddushei HaRim mentioned himself before him for a blessing and for deliverance, and spoke of him with admiration, saying: "It is evident from him that he is among the disciples of Rabbi Elimelech, of blessed memory."

In the book Ohel Elimelech (p. 128), it is further brought in the name of the Av Beit Din (Head of Court) of Searatzk, of blessed memory: Once, Rabbi Moshe'le of Radomysl the Lesser was in the community of Dzikov, staying with the holy rabbi, Rabbi Eliezer, the Av Beit Din (Head of Court) there, for Shabbat. The rabbi of Dzikov asked him about himself. Rabbi Moshe'le perceived his path and said to him: "Your path resembles the mode of conduct of our master, Rabbi Elimelech." The rabbi of Dzikov took pride in this.

A wondrous account was related by his grandson, Morenu HaRav Rabbi Hershel Hoffert, of blessed memory, of London. I heard from my great-grandmother, Mrs. Sarah Brindel, who was a granddaughter of the holy Rabbi Moshe, who related in the name of her father, Rabbi Elimelech, son of Rabbi Moshe, of blessed memory, that the wife of Rabbi Moshe was deaf, lo aleinu (may it not befall us). Rabbi Moshe traveled to his teacher, the Seer, to mention her favorably for blessing and salvation.

With regard to healing, after he mentioned himself and his ailing wife, the holy rabbi of Lublin responded and said: "Rabbi Moshe, there is no need to worry. Your children and your grandchildren will be scholars and upright Jews."

He further related the well-known episode known as "the Fall" of the rabbi of Lublin, as explained at length in the book Ohel HaRebbe. Because of this unfortunate incident, the Seer of Lublin did not allow anyone to pass along a certain side of his body. Once it happened that his disciple, Rabbi Moshe, made a mistake and passed along that side. Those standing nearby immediately began signaling to him not to go that way. But when the Seer noticed their signals, he calmed them and said: "Rabbi Moshe may come to me."
